Silvio's Comments

As I start these comments I am in Mexico, feeling well, doing a great deal of walking and being very active. Last night, I attended a presentation on the History of Mexico. Although I had read many books on the topic, this one hour presentation brought it all together. 2500 years before the birth we celebrate at Christmas, Olmec Indians were settling the Yucatan peninsula. That group was succeeded by several other tribes until the Mayans took over. They had great architectural skills and clever engineers as manifest in the ruins that have been uncovered. In addition, they were experts with numbers. Many have heard about the Aztec calendar but it was actually a Mayan calendar. That calendar comes to an end in the year 2012. (Imagine designing a calendar that lasts for more than 2000 years!)

Now, there is much speculation as to its significance. Will it mean the real Armageddon? Will it signal a great event, either positive or negative? We don't know and as far as I am concerned, I'm looking forward to a healthy 2013. Of interest to me is the fact that these aboriginal people (Mayan, Aztec, Inca) came from the same source as our aboriginal people but to date, no evidence has been found of any comparable development.

These comments don't have much to do with RTO/ERO but I have a plan. You can learn all about everything to do with RTO/ERO, provincially and locally, by coming to our Annual Meeting at the Old Mill on June the 10th. (See details on the special announcement in this issue.) RTO/ERO 1st Vice President, Margaret Couture will be speaking and bringing us up to date on Provincial matters and your Executive will fill you in on District 22 issues.

Our Past President, Gary Vipond, arranged a great entertainer for our last Annual meeting and I am continuing that tradition so that henceforth, the District 22 Annual meeting will become the highlight of the year for all of us. I desperately want to encourage members who have not been coming for a while to return and bring a friend. At this price I'm hoping to be joined by 250 people for lunch.

Pensions

You are all probably wondering how the pension fund is doing in this time of turmoil. As I write this I can only say the fund is having difficulty. This question was asked in an earlier issue of Pension Wise and the only answer was that we would have to wait until April to see the financial statement of the fund for 2008. The date for release is now set as April 2, 2009. You should have seen these figures by the time you get this newsletter. Time is on our side since long term investment is important for the plan and hopefully we will see an economic turn around in the not too distant future.

The government has made a few adjustments that will assist even though the value may be small. I never like to give my money away so if I can keep a little from going to the taxman I will. The new Tax Free Savings Accounts allow you to invest $5000.00 and not pay tax on any interest earned. This may not result in a great saving but every little bit helps.

The second help they "gave" us is the Home Renovation Tax Credit. This requires you to spend a significant amount to gain some return. The HRTC will only run this year from Jan. 27 to Feb.2, 2010. It covers most home renovations from bathrooms, reshingling, painting, flooring, window replacement, decks and even paving and sodding. It will pay you in a tax credit of 15% back on total expenses over $1000 to a maximum of $10000. For a maximum of $1350.00 tax credit ($$10000 - 1000 = 9000 \times 15\%$). This doesn't mean you should search for ways to spend $10000 on renovations but if you planned any renovations this is a good year to have them done. If by chance you are making renovations for the Medical Expense Tax Credit you will be able to claim both credits for the same work. Work under the METC may include such things as widening doorways, lowering cabinets(kitchen and bathroom) ramps etc.

The bottom line is if you can put some money in a TFSA it would probably be a good idea and if renovations are in your plans this may be the year for those as well. Hopefully these suggestions will keep a dollar or two in your pocket and out of the taxman's.

One further word of caution: these are Non Refundable Tax Credits — which means if you are not paying tax (reduced your tax to $0.00) they may not be claimed.

Our Trip to China

This is about my fourth attempt to write a SHORT item about our experiences in China last October. This time no great detail just the bare facts. First let me say this was my first guided and organized tour of any major area. All others have been self guided through most of Europe.

The tour and the sights were wonderful. Like most tours of China it included Beijing, The Yangtze Cruise, Xi'an and the Terra Cotta Warriors, Guilin and the Karst topography of the Li River, Guangzhou (Canton) and Hong Kong. All this in 16 days. (Shanghai was not included in our trip). I would not have wanted to miss a single city but would have preferred a little more free time in each, to do and see things at my own pace. We were certainly kept hopping.

If you were to do this trip, I would recommend that you add two or three days at the beginning and end for your own exploration. The company I dealt with would certainly allow this. Look at your planned itinerary and plan to go to many of the things to be seen in the first and last cities that are not included. Hire a private guide if that's your style, but in both Beijing and Hong Kong you could probably get along quite well with English, a map and some good hand gestures.

The food was good, nothing really unusual, the hotels wonderful, although the beds were firmer, flights between cities uneventful, the scenery fantastic, the people friendly and helpful, and the overall experience great.

I do plan to go back. But will arrange my own trip. The guided tour was great and I am now about to depart on a second such tour to Machu Picchu and Galapagos.

So by all means plan a trip like this with a tour company sit back relax while you can and enjoy everything.

East Of Halifax

Well, this time I am really going east of Halifax...all the way to Tunisia, North Africa.

It all began when Sheila and I were looking for a place to go in the late fall/early winter, for three weeks. It took us about two weeks to decide on Tunisia, so we were off on Air France from Toronto, with a stop off in Paris at Charles De Gaulle airport, then off to Tunis, only a three hour flight.

We were delighted with the first impressions of the country, the people, and the fact that we could speak two of their languages. English is spoken by many, but most speak French, Tunisia's second language.

We travelled from Tunis to Hammamet city, the Jasmine area (yass-meen) where the hotel was situated right on the beautiful Mediterranean. The El Mouradi (our hotel) was fabulous! Huge lobby and restaurants and bars on the main floor, all done in exquisite marble which I found out was the construction material of choice for interiors - it is cheaper than wood and readily available.

After letting our internal clock catch up with local time, we went exploring. What a beautiful area, so clean, safe, friendly and welcoming with no begging at all. Tunisia is a very westernized Moslem country. For the first week we spoke mostly French (our High School and University instructors would have been proud of us. Everything came flooding back by day two.) We could have managed in English, but it was better for many of the locals if we stayed with the French, and many of the tourists that week were from Quebec.

The hotel food was very good with a great variety in the buffet choices with a lot of delicious local dishes. We could cross the street and walk along the sandy shore of the Mediterranean, or down the streets to shopping, restaurants, souks, or a beautiful marina where yachts from all over the world were anchored. Date palms lined the avenues; reach up and pick a fresh date, sweet and ripe. The cleanliness of Hammamet Jasmine was very impressive, but we found that all over the country, even in the Sahara.

The first week we explored locally, walking or taking the little road train that ran into greater Hammamet. Five dinars (about $3.75) got you a return trip of about 10 km. One way, and you got to see the local area very well. We even learned a higher degree of haggling with the locals in the souks and Medina areas. It is expected that one haggles, and ends up with a selling price of about 20% to 30% of the original asking price, or sometimes even less.

The second week we did optional tours. I had always wanted to visit Old Carthage, and see the Roman and Punic ruins. Old Carthage is fantastic! You can take a guided tour once there, or strike out on your own. It was captivating, walking through that much history. The site is just outside the capital of Tunis, population over 2,000,000, a mixture of Moslem, Christian, and Jewish.

It was here we saw the vast reservoirs built by the Romans. An Aquaduct of 163 km from the Atlas Mountain snows carried water for all of Tunis. Parts of this system were in use until 1957.

Our days were very mild, 19--25C and nights about 10-12C. Perfect for sleeping.

The next week we took a two-day Sahara trip. We visited a small oasis city called El Jem, where there is a huge Roman coliseum bigger than in Rome, and still in use for concerts, and large operatic productions. One had full access to it, including the underground areas used to train gladiators, or keep animals, or other items.

We continued south to Esskhira, for drinks, and then on to Matmata for lunch in true Tunisian style, and visited an area where there are cave dwellers, who live in fantastic homes, carved right out of the rock in the Atlas Mountain foothills, and then on to Tamezret for a photo break in the high desert..

Soon we were right in the sandy Sahara, leaving the stony Sahara behind us. Many took an hour and a half camel ride in the desert, but I didn't want to challenge the work of my orthopaedic surgeon, so we declined, and sat and drank excellent cappuccino coffees, and took photos of the camel train and the wonderful sunset.

After darkness fell, we stopped in a lovely little place called Douz (Douzsh) for the night. It was a lovely half pension named Sun Palm Hotel where we visited the bar for needed fortifications, supped, and then relaxed. Our day time temperature was 25 C, and the night fell to 4C ...typical desert temperatures.

At 4:15 a.m. We awoke, had breakfast, then went into the Salt Lake district of Chott El Jered to experience the most spectacular sunrise I have ever seen. The total sky burst into bright vermilion with occasional dark midnight -blue clouds. It was well worth the early wakening! Here salt is harvested for export to France, Germany, and Switzerland to use on winter roads.

We pushed on to meet our 4X4 land Rover to travel into the Dunes of the Sahara, and visit the set of the George Lucas' Star Wars movie...The Tatooine city in the film. It is still in excellent repair, and fascinating. We took more pictures before heading to a beautiful oasis named Chebika where we saw waterfalls cascading into a small stream that gave life to the surrounding area. We arrived back in Hammamet in time for a late supper. What A fabulous trip!!

The rest of the time we walked, did more sight local seeing, relaxing, and visiting an English Style pub near us, where I could get a lovely cold pint or two, each day at about 2:00. We had discovered this place early in our trip. Sheila loved the Cappuccino served there.

I can't say enough positive things about Tunisia, from our point of view. It seems to be a well-kept secret, well worth the trip. visit Tunisia! There is plenty to do, to see, and if you get bored, then it is your own fault. It is unlike its neighbours...safe, clean, and friendly. And one of the fascinating points for me, was to discover that the average age in the country is 27! Universities are free, and young people are catered to by the government. Many, many professionals are women which was very good to see. For women there seems to be a freedom not found in many other Moslem countries. A few photos are herein to show some of the highlights of our trip.

So, fair winds and calm seas to all until we return from Portugal in April.
